

IMPAIRED DRIVING

doesn't mean just alcohol. Devices and drugs both impair drivers and have proliferated to the point where they contribute to the majority of serious accidents in the United States.

As marijuana legalization sweeps across the country and opioid use and abuse has developed into an epidemic, fleet managers are faced with addressing the growing trend of risky behaviors that compromise a drivers' ability to operate fleet vehicles safely. The trends are disturbing, but training, monitoring, and creating a safety-minded culture with clearly defined policies and incentives make a difference.

VOLKSWAGEN

GROUP OF AMERICA

FLEET SERVICES

Each year, physicians issue more than 300,000 prescriptions
for opioid medications

43 states have approved
medical marijuana usage,
and some approved
recreational use, but it still impairs driving

Driving for 5 seconds with your eyes off the road at 55MPH is like driving a football field blindfolded

Fleet safety programs should include company
action plans that reward positive behavior, penalize negative behavior, or both

Volkswagen Group of America Fleet Services has the experts and tools in place to maximize efficiency while improving safety for your fleet. If you would like to discuss ways in which you can address risky driving behavior for your fleet.

Learn more at vwgoafleetservices.com